3	Once upon a time, farther back than anyone can remember, two kingdoms got into an argument. No one could recall what it was about, for it was ages upon ages ago, but everyone was so furious about it that they decided to build a wall between their lands. It was taller than anyone could climb and longer than anyone could travel.
4	The wall kept the two kingdoms utterly separate, though no one could remember just why they couldn't stand to be neighbors anymore. Nonetheless, when cracks appeared in the wall, people repaired them, and when streams wore away holes under the wall, the people quickly filled them in with earth and stones. "We don't want those scoundrels from the other side coming over here," they said.
